must, differently expressed, 1. by gerundive = a necessity inferred from the circumstances of the case, e.g. people, we, you, etc. — die, moriendum est; one — confess that every living creature is mortal, confitendum est omne animal esse mortale; the person by which a thing is to be done in the dative, very seldom by ab, and only when a second dative would make the meaning ambiguous and obscure; e.g. everyone — use his own judgment, suo cuique iudicio utendum est; the property of many citizens is at stake, of which you — take every care, aguntur bona multorum civium, quibus a vobis consulendum est (here a vobis on account of quibus, Cic., who in another passage has also two datives with the gerundive); we — take the same road, haec via (nobis) ingredienda; one — know nature, noscenda est natura; the speaker — consider three points, tria videnda sunt oratori; 2. by oportet (impersonal dei, expressing a necessity inferred from reason, or from the law, or from prudence or justice), with the accus. and infin., or merely with the subjunctive mood; 3. = by debere (οφείλειν), to express a moral obligation, e.g. you — honour him like your father, eum patris loco colere debes; if we were affected in seeing the misery of our allies, what — we now do when we see our own blood shed? sociorum miseriam commovebamur, quid nunc in nostro sanguine facere debemus? Debere, therefore, is nearly = officium, so that we can also express — by officium est alcijs and simply est alcijs, e.g. a stranger — mind only his own affairs, peregrini officium est (i.e. peregrinus debet) nihil praeter suum negotium agere; a good orator — have heard much, est boni oratoris (i.e. bonus orator debet) multa auribus accepisse. Officium is gen. left out in 1. you —, meum, tuum, vestrum est; 4. by putare and existimare, in the rhetorical style, as a form of politeness, so that the hearers may be allowed to come to a conclusion themselves about a point, e.g. you see to what a pitch the republic — proceed, videte quem in locum rempublicum perverturam putetis; 5. by opus est (impersonal χρῆναι), in speaking of any event subjectively felt, and from the supplying of which we expect great advantages; either with accus. and infin., or if the person who — do, etc., a thing is added in the dative, ut with subjunctive mood, e.g. if anything should happen which you — know (which it is useful for you to know), I'll write to you, si quid erit, quod te scire opus est, scribam; I — go and wash myself, mihi opus est ut lavem. Also, I — have so and so may be rendered by mihi opus est, either impersonally with abl., or personally with the nominative of the person or thing that — be had, e.g. we — have a guide, dux et auctor nobis opus est; we — use your authority, auctoritate tua nobis opus est; 6, by neccesse est (impersonal, ἀνάγκη ἐστίν), expressing necessity, either with accus. and infin., or simply with subjunctive mood, e.g. this mortal frame of ours — (necessarily) perish some time, corpus mortale aliquo tempore perire neccesse est; 7, by facere non possum, or simply non possum with quin, etc., or feri non potest with ut non, etc., or non possum non with infin., to express what cannot be avoided, inward necessity, e.g. I — exclaim, non possum quin exclamem; 8, simply by the verb: in the indicative, inasmuch as in Latin we often leave it for the reader to supply in his own mind under what circumstances an action took place, e.g., I — confess, confiteor (Ter.), fateor (Cic.); I — regret, doleo (Cic.); I — express my surprise, miror (Liv.); this one thing I — remark, unum illud dico; in the subjunctive, if we only speak of a supposed necessity, e.g. a circumstance, at which not only all educated people, but even savages — blush, o rem dignam, in quâ non modo docti, verum etiam agrestes erubescant; 9, you — (as urgent appeal), either simply by the imperative mood, or by fue ut, e.g. if you are not satisfied with that, you — accuse your own injustice, haec si vobis non probabuntur, vestram iniquitatem accusate; you — not (as an urgent warning, not to a thing), fue ne, etc. (= mind that not, etc.), cave ne (= take care lest, or not to, etc.), noli with infin., e.g. you — not wish, cave ne cupias.

no, I. adv. non, minime vero, minime . . . quidem (= —, not at all), im(m)o, im(m)o vero, im(m)o enimvero, im(m)o potius (= —, rather to the contrary); instead of our — in answer to a question, we generally repeat the verb of the preceding question (e.g. is your brother within? — ! istne frater intus? non est? you are not angry, I hope? non iratus es? — ! non sum iratus! don't you believe that? an tu haec non credis? —, not at all! minime vero! are we at fault then? num igitur peccamus? —, not you! minime vos quidem! so then you deceive him? sicne hunc decipis? — ! on the contrary he deceives me, im(m)o enimvero hic me decipit; — ! that is not it, ye judges; — ! it is not indeed! non est ita, iudices! non est profecto!; to say yes or —, aut etiam aut non respondere; one says yes, the other —, hic ait, ille negat; to say — to anything that is offered us, to decline, abnuere or recusare alqd or de alqd re, negare se alqd facturum esse. II. (none), adj. nullus, nemo (nullus of persons and things, nemo of persons only), non ullus, non quisquam (= not one, if a greater stress is to be laid upon the negative; the former as an adj., the latter as a pronoun), neuter (= neither, must always be used if we speak of two individuals or of two parties); if nullus and nemo are used in a partitive sense, that is, if — stands in opp. to the remaining parts or the whole, they govern the genit. (e.g. — mortal, nemo mortalium; — animal is more prudent, nulla beluarum prudentior est); the genit. may also sometimes be expressed by a circumloc. with de, ex (e.g. — man of our army was killed, nemo de nostris cecidit); sometimes it would appear that instead of nullus and nemo we use in Latin nihil (with genit. when it stands for nullus); however, nihil expresses the negative more strongly than nullus = none at all (e.g. there is — one (at all) more miserable than I am, and — one more happy than Catulus, nihil me infortunatius, nihil fortunatius est Catulo; to have — doubt (at all), nihil dubitationis habere); very often we use — when the negative does not refer to anything in general, but to something particular; in this case, which takes place principally when — belongs as an adj. to a noun or refers as a predicate to a noun previously mentioned, we use in Latin the negative non instead of nullus (e.g. you ordered them — ship, navem is non imperasti). We likewise use non in Latin for — when the object in English is expressed by a verbal noun (e.g. to have — fear, non timere; to feel — doubt, non dubitare; to feel — hatred against anyone, non odisse alqm, etc.); — one, nemo; at — place, nusquam; at — time, numquam (quang), nullo tempore; and at — time, nec umquam; in — respect, nihil; in — wise, nullo modo, nulla ratione. nobody, n. nemo, nullus (= no; as the genit. of nemo, neminis was little used, nullus was used instead), nemo homo; and —, nec ullus, nec quisquam; that —, ne quid; a —, terrae filius. nowhere, adv. nusquam.

not, adv. non, haud (the former in gen., the latter only in certain comb., chiefly before adv. and adj., to modify their meaning, e.g. — much, haud multum; — far, haud longe); nullus, as frequently used by modern writers, in ancient writers not merely = non, but = at all (e.g. Philotimus non modo nullus venit, sed, etc., Cic.); minus (= less, notas strongas non), nihil (stronger than —, = by no means), neutiquam, haudquaquam, nequaquam, minime (also stronger than —), ne (expresses a request, wish, command, e.g. do — resist, if, etc., ne repugnatis, si, etc.; dare —, ne audeto); fac ne, with subjunctive mood (see LEST, etc.), or cave (ne) with subj. (= take care lest, etc.), or noli (with infin. = do — wish, all three only = an invitation, a request, etc., uttered in a modest manner, instead of ne; do — be tempted to, cave cupias; do — believe it, cave credas); in double prohibitions, neve (neu) . . . neve (neu); after verbs of fearing, — = ut (e.g. veror ut veniat = I fear that he will — come). In questions, — is expressed by annon (= perhaps —), when an affirmative answer is expected (e.g. did I — say perhaps that it would happen so?annon dixi hoc futurum?); or nonne, if we put a question with a view to convince anyone that we are right (e.g. what, does — the dog resemble the wolf?quid, canis nonne lupo similis?); by ne (enclit.), esp. with verbs that express a perception, if we are not certain whether the person spoken to perceives the thing (e.g. do you — see that in Homer Nestor makes a boast of his virtues?videsne ut apud Homerum saepissime Nestor de virtutibus praedicet?); by non, if we think that the person does — at all perceive the thing to which we wish to direct his attention (e.g. do you — see how great the danger is when, etc., non vides quanto periculo, etc., by num, when a negative answer is expected; — on any account, minime, minime gentium, fac or cave ne with subj., noli with infin.; — by any means, nullo pacto, nullo modo (= in no wise), nihil; — at all, neutiquam; — so very (before an adj. or adv.), haud or non ita (e.g. — so very far, haud (non) ita longe); — sufficiently, — quite, non satis, parum (= too little); — even, ne . . . quidem (the word upon which the stress lies must be placed between ne and quidem, e.g. I do — even consider this profitable, ne utile quidem hoc esse arbitror); — so, — in this manner, non ita, non sic; = less, minus (e.g. — to stray so far, minus late vagari); but —, non vero, neque vero, non autem (the second in passing to something else; non autem sometimes separated by a word which is put between, e.g. but I can — tell you, non possum autem dicere; if “but —” is merely used to introduce an antithesis, non alone is used, e.g. I mean the father, but — the son, dico patrem, non filium); — either, ne or neque (e.g. Epicurus says, we do — require understanding, nor words either, Epicurus negat opus esse ratione, neque disputatione; fortune does — give us virtue, and therefore does — take it away either, virtutem fortuna non dat, ideo nec detrahit); but also . . . —, ne . . . quidem (the word upon which the stress lies is placed between ne and quidem, especially in opp. to something else, e.g. but also Jugurtha did — remain quiet in the meantime, sed nec Jugurtha quidem quietus interea); and —, et non (when the negative refers to one word only, as when the stress lies upon the negative), neque (to connect two sentences or two parts of the same sentence, e.g. via certa et non longa = a safe road and one that is — very long, but via certa neque longa = a road both safe and short); and so —, and therefore —, ac non (to express an inference, e.g. there was nobody who would have taken him to be accused of a crime, and who would — therefore think that he had been condemned over and over again, nemo erat qui illum reum, ac non millies condemnatum arbitratetur); and — rather, ac non potius, or simply ac non; and — less, atque etiam, itemque (= and so also, likewise also); to say —, by negare; my friend said that he would — do it, meus amicus negabat se hoc facturum esse; in connexion with an adj., — is often rendered in Latin by one word, containing — and the adj., e.g. — prudent, amens (= silly), demens (= foolish); — pleasant, injucundus, ingratus.

B, when the sentence with — contains the object of the verb of the main clause, use acc. and inf.; 1, this is the case after all verba sensum et affectuum, to which belong also “to know, conceive, remind, expect, hope, fear, believe,” etc.; then also after fac, when it is = finje, fancy —, etc., fac qui ego sum esse te; after the verbs “to hope, swear, promise, threaten,” we use the accus. and fut. infin., only after “to hope” we use the accus. and pres. infin. when we speak of anything referring to the present time, and the accus. and perf. infin. when we speak of anything past; 2, after the so-called verba declarandi, as “to say, tell, indicate, remember, convince, teach, prove (efficere),” etc.; 3, also after “to fix, determine, wish, forbid, impose, concede (that anything is so),” etc., the infin., if the sentence with — declares the object, whilst if it contains a wish or intention, we use ut; after “they,” “the people say,” “it is reported,” etc. (dicunt, tradunt, ferunt, produunt, perhibent), either by accus. and infin., or the nom. and indic. (of the passive voice), e.g. dicunt Romulum primum regem Romanum fuisse, or Romulus primus rex Romanorum fuisse dicebatur; dicunt vos adfuisse, or vos dicebamini adfuisse; after dubito, in the sense “I doubt not,” we find in Cic. always quoniam. C, when the sentence with — contains a description of anything or a circumst., 1, of the subject, when we can put “which” instead of “—” by quod, as after “there is reason,” or “there is no reason,” (which, etc.), est (habeo), non est, nihil est quod (we may also use cui, as in English); also after “it is pleasing, rejoicing, I am glad, it is painful,” etc. (e.g. nihil est quod [i.e. illud quod] timeas); also after “we must add (eo or hac accedit),” where we use quod when we speak of a matter of fact, and ut when we refer to anything that is only in progress, always when the thing is only about to happen; 2, of the object when — = “because;” also by quod after “to be glad, rejoice (gaudere), to feel sorry, grieve (dolere), to wonder (mirari),” etc., where we use quod when we speak of a definite fact, but si, if we speak of something merely imaginary or as we suppose it; 3, when — stands for “inasmuch as, inasfar as.” D, always ut or qui (quae, quod) when the sentence with — expresses the purpose, condition, aim, effect, surmise, permission, encouragement, wish or command, as subject or object, or as additional clause; after is sum, non is sum, talis, qualis, is (such a one), ejusmodi, etc.; also qui, etc. (ut is, etc.), after tam, tantus, generally after negations, after quis? and after comparatives with quam, when these words express the degree, measure, up to which anything is said to possess a certain quality; and after nouns to express a purpose (e.g. Caesar sent messengers — they might say, Caesar nuntios misit qui dicerent); but ut is, etc., to express result; — not, after “to fear, to be afraid,” etc., ne non, seldom ut, and — alone.

ne; only — not, — by any means, ut ne (ne being placed before — which is prevented), e.g. ut hoc ne facerem (= he took care —, etc.); I say — . . . not, etc., by nego with accus. and infin., e.g. he asserts — there are no gods, deos esse negat. B. — in exclamations, 1, when we express a wish, oh — ut ! utam ! o si (see On); God grant —, etc., faxit Deus, ut, etc.; — not! utrum ne ! 2, in general exclamations, by accus. and infin. (which apparently is not governed by any preceding verb), e.g. me miserum ! te in tantas aerumnas propter me incidisse !

CASSELL'S NEW FRENCH DICTIONARY.

French-English—English-French.

Edited by JAMES BOÏELLE, B.A., Officier d'Académie ; sometime Examiner in the University of London. 1,220 pp., demy 8vo, strongly bound in cloth, 7s. 6d. ; or in half leather, 10s. 6d.

WHILST this Dictionary is based on Cassell's French Dictionary, which has had a circulation of more than 600,000 copies, it is virtually a NEW WORK. For over four years Prof. Boïelle was engaged in its preparation, and during that time expended enormous labour in the compilation of a volume which, it is believed, is far in advance of any Dictionary of its size ever published. The following are some of the features which distinguish this great work :—

1. It is set in a new type specially selected for its clearness.
2. It consists of over 1,200 pages, and is beautifully printed on paper of excellent quality.
3. Many thousands of new words and phrases, idioms and idiomatic expressions, and hundreds of proverbs with their English equivalents, have been selected and included after extensive research.
4. The latest classical, general, scientific, commercial, and naval and military terms are incorporated.
5. The pronunciation of words where necessary is carefully indicated.
6. In the English-French part the notation of words has been carefully marked throughout.
7. The different prepositions governing verbs have been printed in bold clarendon type.
8. The list of geographical names of countries and places has been largely added to.
